

Writing prompt: Speaking in ecological matters, Barbara Kingsolver says of Americans in general that “We’d surely do better if only we knew any better.” Others would argue that even if they are well-informed, people will tend to sacrifice the greater ecological good in favor of their own comfort or convenience. In a well-organized essay, defend, challenge, or qualify the validity of Kingsolver’s assertion, using evidence from your own reading, observation, and/or experience to support your position.

Writing prompt: Speaking in ecological matters, Barbara Kingsolver says of Americans in general that “We’d surely do better if only we knew any better.” Others would argue that even if they are well-informed, people will tend to sacrifice the greater ecological good in favor of their own comfort or convenience. In a well-organized essay, defend, challenge, or qualify the validity of Kingsolver’s assertion, using evidence from your own reading, observation, and/or experience to support your position.

Writing prompt: Speaking in ecological matters, Barbara Kingsolver says of Americans in general that “We’d surely do better if only we knew any better.” Others would argue that even if they are well-informed, people will tend to sacrifice the greater ecological good in favor of their own comfort or convenience. In a well-organized essay, defend, challenge, or qualify the validity of Kingsolver’s assertion, using evidence from your own reading, observation, and/or experience to support your position.

Writing prompt: Speaking in ecological matters, Barbara Kingsolver says of Americans in general that “We’d surely do better if only we knew any better.” Others would argue that even if they are well-informed, people will tend to sacrifice the greater ecological good in favor of their own comfort or convenience. In a well-organized essay, defend, challenge, or qualify the validity of Kingsolver’s assertion, using evidence from your own reading, observation, and/or experience to support your position.